New Refworks

The full launch of the new RefWorks site is scheduled for June 2016. At present we would advise our RefWorks customers to wait until the full launch before upgrading because there are still some features that need to be added to the new site. For a detailed feature comparison please refer to the attached PDF.

The RefWorks support page contains a wealth of information about new RefWorks, please see: http://support.proquest.com/apex/homepage?id=kA140000000GxPKCA0&l=en_US. The support page includes:

- Migration guides
- Frequently asked questions
- User and admin guides
- Training webinars
- And more

Please contact our RefWorks specialist, Gregory Judelson (Gregory.judelson@proquest.com), with any questions you may have.

New RefWorks: Key New Features

- Collect and Import: with RefWorks it is easy to collect or import materials from the open web, Google, major database platforms, and directly from your PDFs or Office documents.
- Summon Integration: RefWorks uses ProQuest's Summon Discovery service (via API) to suggest and correct metadata in manually entered and captured references.
- The world's most intuitive citation style editor: not only does RefWorks support over 4000 styles, but users can customize their own citation styles in an easy to use interface

Collaboration & Funding Research: The New Pivot Launched

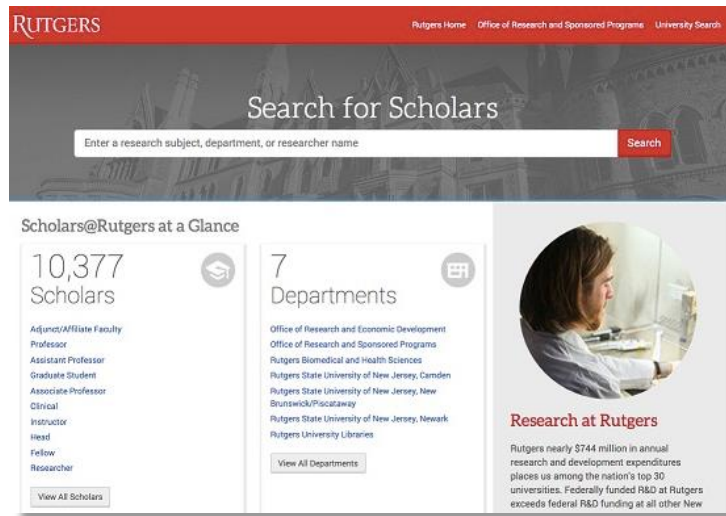

Pivot Gallery is a customizable website where an institution can quickly and easily promote its research talent, and their work, to the world.

Ideal for helping an institution:

- Gain exposure for its resident experts among Media Outlets, Publishers and Law Firms
- Showcase faculty to assist in recruiting efforts
- Promote important publications, grants and patents that have been published over the years

This public-facing website can quickly and cost-effectively be built for an institution by the Pivot team at ProQuest using the institution's existing Pivot profiles, and can be customized to fit into its brand look and feel.

Our proposal: ProQuest Central

ProQuest Central—the largest aggregated general reference database in the industry.

ProQuest Central is a continuously growing set of multidisciplinary resources, becoming more robust—and valuable—during the term of any customer's subscription.

By the numbers - Total title comparison

ProQuest Central compared to EBSCO's Academic Search Complete and Business Source Complete

ProQuest Central At-a-glance

160+ subject areas are covered by diverse content types and sources

- More than 22,000 periodical titles.
- Over 100,000 total titles.
- More than 1,000 full text newspapers.

Advantages for Users

- A single, simplified, state-of-the-art interface.
- Broad cross-search for interdisciplinary research.
- Narrow, focused search in major subject areas.
- Periodical content is updated daily.

Advantages for Librarians

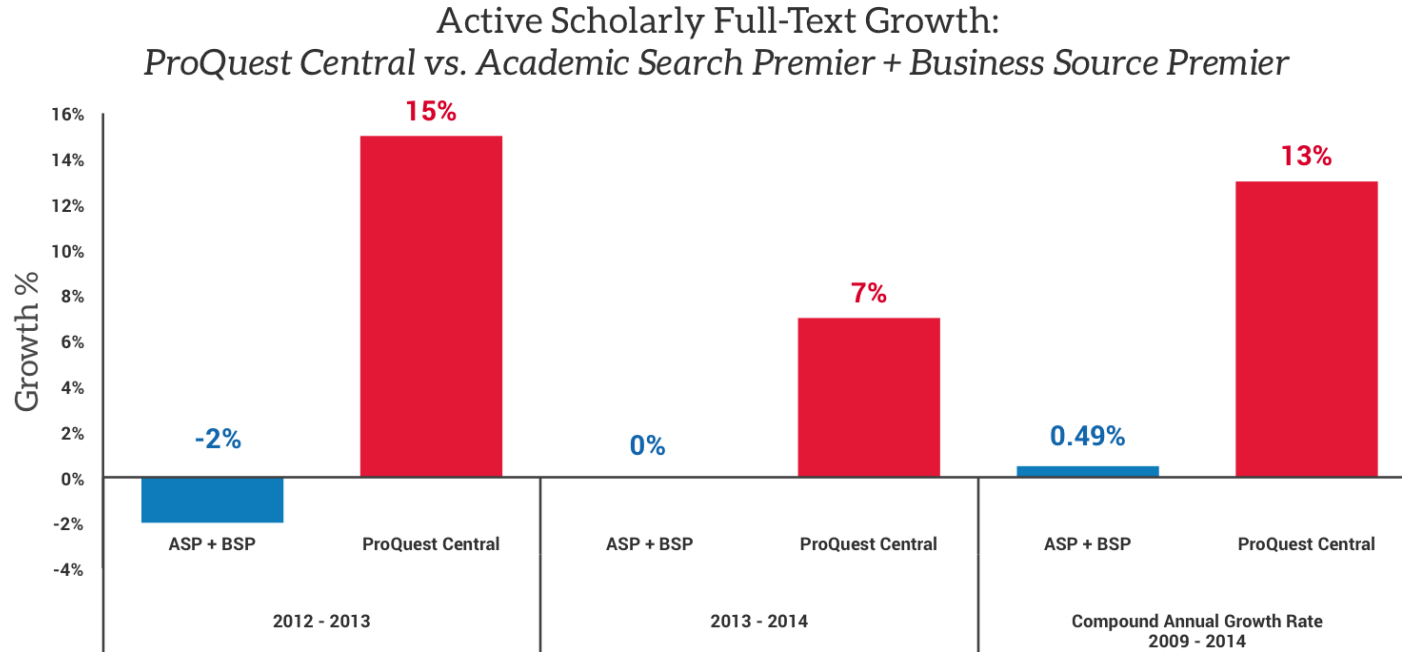

- One point for all administrative needs.
- Training on one platform.
- Ease of set-up & promotion.
- Addresses users at every experience level.

Spotlight on Medical and Nursing Coverage

Included within ProQuest Central is complete health and medical coverage. Users can access the key medical journals, practical guidance and in-depth coverage in conference proceedings and working papers, as well as hundreds of health, psychology and nursing videos and thousands of dissertations.

What's unique about the ProQuest Central's health and medical coverage is it addresses the diverse needs of faculty, students, researchers, and teaching tool users. Here are two examples of how it can be used in the classroom:

Teaching tools

Curriculum-based nursing and psychology videos to bridge the gap between textbook study and the practical hospital environment.

Quality and reputable content

ProQuest's medical coverage includes many journals researchers deem "essential" including The New England Journal of Medicine, The Lancet and the Journal of the American Medical Association.

A Growth Model with Corruption in Public Procurement: Equilibria and Policy Implications

We study the relationship between corruption in public procurement and economic growth, within the Solow framework in discrete time, while assuming that the public good is an input in the productive process and that the State fixes a monitoring level on corruption depending on the tax revenues. The resulting model is a two-dimensional, continuous and piecewise smooth map describing the evolution of the capital per capita and that of the corruption level. We study model from the analytical point of view: we determine its fixed points, we study their local stability and, finally, we find conditions on parameters such that multiple equilibria co-exist. We also present numerical simulations useful to explain the role of parameters in the long(run path of the model and to analyze the structure of the basins of attraction when multiple equilibria emerge. Our study aims at demonstrating that stable equilibria with positive corruption may exist (according to empirical evidence), even though the State may reduce corruption by increasing the wage of the bureaucrat or by increasing the amount of tax revenues used to monitor corruption.

Abstract We study the relationship between corruption in public procurement and economic growth within the Solow framework in discrete time, while assuming that the public good is an input in the productive process and that the State fixes a monitoring level on corruption depending on the tax revenues. The resulting model is a two-dimensional, continuous and piecewise smooth dynamic system which describes the evolution of the capital per capita and that of the corruption level. We prove that the model admits multiple equilibria; their stability and the structure of their basins is studied. We also present numerical simulations for economic meaningful parameter values, useful to explain the role of parameters in the long-run path of the model. Our study aims at demonstrating that stable equilibria with positive corruption may exist (according to empirical evidence), even though the State may reduce corruption by increasing the wage of the bureaucrat or by increasing the amount of tax revenues used to monitor corruption.

Romania

Highlights

- Although quarterly growth slowed to 0.1% in Q1, this followed two very strong quarters and still meant that the economy was 3.9% up on a year earlier, the fastest in the EU. Household consumption was the main driver of economic growth, up 6.6% year-on-year, comfortably its strongest rate since before the global financial crisis. And while Q2 may see some setback for consumption after the sharp rise in Q1, we expect a robust underlying trend in the coming quarters. By contrast, both government consumption and investment contracted in Q1, but the latter should start to pick up soon in response to the marked improvement in both exports and consumer spending over the last year. With regard to the external sector, the likely boost to exports from the gradual European recovery is likely to be outweighed by faster domestic demand sucking in more imports. Overall, we have raised our 2014 GDP growth forecast to 3% from 2.8% last month.
- CPI inflation was just 0.9% in May, the lowest on record. In large part, the latest decline was driven by we do not believe that the central bank will lower the policy interest rate any further (it last cut in February). The central bank attributes recent currency strength to external factors and it believes inflation will pick up in the coming months.

- The IMF remains confident in Romania's ability to implement meaningful structural reforms. However, policymakers still need to make a lot of progress if they are to achieve the IMF targets. While Romgaz was privatised last year, energy sector assets Hidroelectrica and Oltenia have yet to be sold off. In addition, despite likely opposition from the IMF, the government will probably implement a 5% cut in the payroll tax rate as it looks to spur growth. Overall, though, the government remains committed to its policy goals and we believe it will continue to work towards meeting its fiscal targets and reform objectives.
- Although we have upgraded Romania's economic prospects, there remain risks from a more severe

Abstract

This article uses a literature review about postponement, decoupling point and cold chain to offer alternatives for Brazilian distribution of refrigerated chicken. It was possible to conclude that a decoupling point between first and further industrialization can be a viable option for selling and distributing refrigerated chicken that has from seven to maximum of thirty days of shelf life.

Reverse innovation is a business model that is not explicitly pursued by Western companies operating in the emerging market of the foreign subsidiary and results when products initially developed in the emerging market of the parent company. This has been the case for the Chinese market that, surprisingly, was eventually developed. The development of the product presented challenges and the corporate levels.
